Today – A weakening complex of showers/T-storms will overspread Myrtle Beach, mainly before 10am. Additional showers/T-storms are possible this afternoon but will be contingent on instability rebuilding behind the morning activity. South/southwest winds will increase behind the early afternoon sea breeze with gusts over 20 mph possible. Forecast rainfall: 0.25-0.50" with locally higher amounts in T-storms.

Extended forecast – A cold front will move through the Carolinas on Friday bringing one last round of showers/T-storms to the area, mainly Friday afternoon. Behind the front, a cooler and less humid airmass will overspread the region for the weekend. High temperatures in the middle to upper 70s can be expected with overnight lows in the upper 50s.
