Today – Quiet conditions are in place this morning with some areas of low clouds filling in across the region. As daytime heating increases, a low threat (20-30% chance) for shower/T-storms will develop this afternoon. The high threat for showers/T-storms likely remains north of The Woodlands. Otherwise, southeast winds can be expected throughout the day with gusts of 20-25 mph this afternoon. Forecast rainfall: Less than 0.15". Sunrise: 6:35am / Sunset: 8:01pm

Extended forecast – A large complex of showers/T-storms likely develops across central Texas this evening and then pushes towards the Houston area towards sunrise. There is considerable uncertainty to how well organized this activity is when it arrives, however the period between 4-10am appears most favorable for T-storms. Rainfall amounts over 1.00" will be possible with this activity. Improving conditions will be possible during the afternoon with southerly winds gusting over 20 mph.
