Today – The moist easterly flow is producing low clouds and patchy mist or drizzle this morning. Otherwise, the clouds should lift enough by midday allowing drier conditions for the afternoon. Temperatures will be slightly warmer than previous days with highs in the mid 70's. Clouds will lower again tonight, producing areas of mist or drizzle late.

Extended forecast – An area of low pressure is expected to develop in the Gulf of Mexico and slowly move north over the next few days. This will bring increasing chances for showers as we approach Monday evening with areas of rain likely Tuesday into Wednesday. Drier conditions will return late in the week with more tranquil conditions.
