Today – An upper level disturbance is producing showers to our west this morning and is weakening as it move to the east. We will receive the clouds from this system, making for mostly cloudy skies for a good portion of the day. Can't rule out an isolated shower or t-storm this afternoon, but the bulk of the activity will remain to our west across the mountains and foothills.

Extended forecast – Hot and humid conditions can be expected on Monday as a cold front approaches from the west. This will bring a chance for shower and t-storms during the afternoon and evening hours. After the front passes, slightly cooler and less humid conditions will return on Tuesday with highs in the mid 80's.
