Today – Partly cloudy skies and warm temperatures can be expected this afternoon. Slightly drier air will make it feel a little more comfortable and should help keep any thunderstorm development to a minimum today. Best chances for seeing storms will be to our north across the higher terrain of North Georgia. Otherwise, light winds can be expected out of the E-NE 4-8 mph.

Extended forecast – High pressure will continue to build southward and provide slightly cooler temperatures on Sunday with highs in the mid 80's. Mostly sunny skies and above normal temperatures can be expected through the middle of next week as high pressure continues to dominate. Temperatures may actually hit 90 degrees on Wednesday making for the hottest day of next week.
