

SUNDAY, JUNE 18, 2017 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Happy Father's Day! Showers across the area before daybreak mostly missed us by 20+ miles or so both to the north and south! We did manage to pick up .01" here at Erin Hills overnight. The remaining showers on radar right now will be lifting away to the northeast of the area behind the passage of the cold front. Winds this morning have already begun to gust over 20 mph and will gust around 25 mph midday out of the west to northwest. Expect clouds to break for some sunshine and dewpoints to fall into the 50s for play today as the high reaches 74. An upper level low dropping south into the Great Lakes could trigger an afternoon shower (20% chance) or sprinkle (40% chance), but the best chance for rain will remain north of us with only a very slim risk of a rumble around 4 PM if at all. Tonight will be much cooler with clearing skies and then Monday will still be somewhat windy with a slightly better chance for an afternoon shower (40% chance).
