Extended forecast – A strong low pressure system will move inland from the Pacific Ocean, bringing areas of rain Thursday through Friday. Scattered showers will slowly increase in coverage through Thursday, though rainfall amounts through 5pm will likely hold below 0.10". The highest precipitation chances are expected Thursday evening through noon Friday. Additional rainfall of around 0.20-0.40" is anticipated, with the majority of this falling as a light to moderate intensity rainfall. There is an isolated risk for a heavy rain shower or thunderstorm Thursday night through Friday morning. Dry conditions return this weekend, with temperatures in the middle to upper 60s.

Forecast prepared by meteorologist Joe Halvorson.
