Today – Much of the daylight hours should remain dry, however a front is expected to approach late this afternoon into this evening. This will touch off a few showers and T-storms, with the best chances holding off until after 8pm. Very humid and hot conditions are expected today with a high in the lower 90s. Winds will be out of the west-southwest at 7-14 mph.

Extended Forecast – A frontal boundary will move through the area this evening with a period of showers and T-storms expected before midnight. Gusty winds and heavy downpours are possible. Low pressure developing over the Mid-Atlantic this weekend should allow additional waves of scattered showers and T-storms to rotate through the area. Highest chances will be during the afternoon hours.
