

SUNDAY, JUNE 17, 2018 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Happy Father's Day Everyone! Temps are starting off a little milder this morning just above 60 degrees and it will be another warm day again today as highs climb into the low 80s by lunchtime before dropping back slowly as the afternoon progresses. Skies will be mostly sunny much of the day with just a few bands of high clouds streaking by to our north and east this morning and then more high clouds try to approach our area from the north and west later on this afternoon. The humidity will be comfortable again today with dewpoints in the 50s and low 60s at times. Light winds early this morning may occasionally gust out of the west up around 8 mph through breakfast. Then look for west and northwest winds mid morning to become more noticeable near 10 mph at times. As we get closer to noon the wind will come more from the southwest with a more gradual increase than we saw yesterday with eventually a southerly onshore breeze this afternoon. All the computer models are still suggesting that the wind speed for this afternoon will be about 2 mph less than yesterday afternoon, however we'll maintain the same forecasted speed that we had for yesterday of 10-15 mph winds with the highest gusts up around 20 mph mid afternoon before trending downward this evening. Tonight will be breezy, then look for more humid and windy conditions on Monday ahead of a front for late Monday into Tuesday.
