7 AM Weather Forecast

Sunday, April 14, 2019

Synopsis: Thunderstorms are rolling across Alabama and northwest Georgia this morning, and will gradually approach Augusta National through the day. This morning, isolated showers and thunderstorms can be expected in the area, but most of this activity passes to the north and east by 11 AM. The storms to the west will weaken some as they move through Atlanta by 10-11 AM, but are expected to hold together and regenerate upon moving through central and eastern Georgia early this afternoon. Therefore, rain and thunderstorms are likely to arrive in the Augusta area near or shortly after 3 PM. Storms initially have potential to produce heavy downpours, strong winds and occasional lightning for 1-2 hours before tapering off to showers. Rainfall is expected to average 0.30-0.60". Another line of showers and thunderstorms will be possible around 9-10 PM tonight as the front finally pushes through Augusta. Temperatures warm into the upper 70's to near 80F today, while southerly winds increase to 15-20 mph, gusting 25-30 mph this afternoon. Higher gusts will be possible with any storms. Sunny, cooler and less humid conditions return on Monday with highs in the lower 70's.
