

SUNDAY, JUNE 16, 2019 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Happy Father's Day! Look for periods of mist and maybe a touch of fog until 8 AM or so, then the marine layer should begin lifting as the morning wears on with skies brightening by lunchtime. In fact, the computer models are back to trying to give us the most amount of sunshine today that we've seen the last few days, however we won't go overboard as a lot of clouds will still be sticking around. So expect either peeks of sun or partly sunny skies for a few hours early to mid afternoon, then as we head towards 5 PM the clouds are forecast to swallow the Monterey Peninsula back up with fog and/or mist a real possibility before sunset. Assuming we get as much sunshine as the last two days or a little more, temps should be allowed to slip just past 60 degrees for a short time with winds probably ending up being similar to yesterday. Northwest flow early this morning will turn to become again a more westerly breeze this afternoon at mainly 6-12 mph across much of the course with gusts up to around 20 mph possible at #7. The forecast shows a little more sun on Monday with definitely more wind out of the southwest.
