Today – Mostly sunny skies will prevail today as high pressure builds over southeast Texas. A slightly drier air mass residing over the region will lead to rather comfortable weather today, even though temperatures will rise to the middle or upper 80s later today. Winds will be rather light as well, coming from the southeast.

Extended forecast – Mostly sunny skies will prevail on Monday as high pressure keeps the dry weather pattern in place one more day. Temperatures will warm to the middle or upper 80, with light southeasterly winds expected. The next chance for rain and storms will come late Monday night and especially Tuesday, with heavy storms are expected to develop by afternoon.

Forecast prepared by meteorologist Willis Young.
