Today – The affects of a cold front will begin to be felt across Central Mexican Plateau today. Showers are expected to develop across the higher terrain to our east after 10am this morning. While its unlikely these reach Leon, sprinkles of brief light shower can't be ruled out between 12-5pm. Temperatures this afternoon should only reach the middle 70s. Initially light winds are expected to increase after 1-3pm with gusts over 15 mph becoming possible. Sunrise: 7:09am / Sunset: 6:50pm

Extended Forecast – A period of elevated easterly winds are possible this evening with gusts of 20-25 mph. Winds will diminish by midnight with a sharp temperature drop overnight. Some very patchy frost could occur with temperatures falling into the 38-41F range. Temperatures during the tournament rounds will likely reach the middle to upper 70s Thursday through Saturday and then the lower to middle 80s Sunday. Lows will generally be in the middle to upper 40s. Light winds during the morning will favor west or southwest winds during the afternoon. Gustier winds are possible Saturday and especially Sunday.
