Today – Some light, shallow fog is possible before 8am, otherwise partly cloudy skies can be expected the rest of the day. The better moisture has lifted into North Florida today so the threat for precipitation is low. Regardless, isolated shower development could take place after 3pm this afternoon. Temperatures will reach the lower 90s this afternoon with heat indices near 100F. Winds likely remain below 10 mph for much of the day. Sunrise: 7:23am / Sunset: 7:03pm

Extended Forecast – Hurricane Delta is expected to make landfall along the Gulf Coast Friday with the remnants tracking northeastward through the Southeast U.S this weekend. Moisture will begin to return on Friday and especially for Saturday and Sunday. This will bring higher rain chances to the area with scattered showers/T-storms possible each afternoon. Temperatures will climb into the lower 90s each day. Southeasterly winds at 7-14 mph are expected Friday and Saturday. Winds should switch to the southwest on Sunday.
