Extended Forecast – A strong upper level low will move out of the Southeast U.S tonight with an area of low pressure developing northeast of Abaco. In response, scattered showers should develop over the islands with increasing winds. The shower threat likely decreases during the day Wednesday, however winds will continue to strengthening. Northwestern winds of 20-30 mph, gusting to 35 mph now appear likely. A period of stronger gusts can't be ruled out. Winds decrease significantly for Thursday with just a low chance for a shower.
