Today – Largely expecting dry conditions under partly cloudy skies this afternoon and overnight, but a passing shower or two cannot be ruled out. Easterly winds are forecast to reach speeds up to 20 mph this afternoon before becoming light and variable tonight. The temperature will top out around 83 degrees.

Rainfall through 6am Saturday: Less than 0.10"

Winds (mph)	SE 5-10	E/SE 7-12	Calm → Var. 4-8	Variable 5-10

Extended forecast – Dry air in place will limit the coverage and intensity of any isolated showers that are able to develop on Saturday, with a large majority of the day likely to remain dry. Moisture levels are expected to slowly increase on Sunday ahead of an approaching cold front, with pop-up showers forecast to develop after 1-2pm. These slow-moving pop-up showers should develop over El Yunque National Forest and will erratically drift off the higher terrain due to a variable wind pattern.

Forecast prepared by meteorologist Joe Halvorson.
