Today – The marine layer briefly came inland earlier this morning but has since retreated and is unlikely to move back onshore. This will set the stage for mostly sunny skies for much of the day and temperatures reaching the lower to mid 60s. Light easterly winds to become southwesterly at 5-9 mph, gusting to 12 mph by this afternoon. Sunrise: 6:40am / Sunset: 5:35pm

Extended Forecast –With weak onshore flow continuing into this weekend, it appears the marine layer could push inland again tonight and Friday night. However, given the light gradients in place any low clouds/fog development may remain spotty. Otherwise, each day will feature sunny skies and dry conditions. Typical sea breeze wind pattern expected throughout the week with light easterly winds during the morning, becoming west or southwest during the afternoon. Speeds will generally be below 15 mph with strongest winds favoring Friday and Saturday.
