Today – There will be a lull in the precipitation for a while this morning with cloudy skies. Scattered showers and thunderstorms will begin to redevelop by late morning/early afternoon and become more numerous as we go through the rest of the day. Locally heavy rainfall can be expected at times that could produce some flash flooding. 1-2 inches of rain is possible today with locally higher amounts.

Extended forecast – The trough of low pressure is expected to slowly move to the east on Sunday allowing drier air/lower humidity to return as we go through the day. Showers and isolated thunderstorms during the morning hours will give way to mostly cloudy skies for the afternoon. Partly cloudy skies and less humid conditions return on Monday with a small chance for an isolated afternoon thunderstorm with highs in the mid 80s.
