Today – Easterly flow will push clouds over the Atlantic on-shore into the Orlando area as we go through the morning into the afternoon. Can't rule out an isolated shower moving inland this afternoon, but the bulk of the shower activity should remain along the coast today. Temperatures should moderate nicely with highs reaching the upper 60s to around 70 degrees.

Extended Forecast – A weak area of low pressure will develop over the gulf and move to the east on Sunday. This will drag a cold front across Central Florida and bring showers to the Orlando area during the late afternoon and especially the evening hours. Showers will continue into early Monday morning before ending and moving off to the east. Clearing skies and cooler temperatures return Monday with highs in the 60s.
