Extended Forecast – A lower threat for showers/T-storms should linger into Saturday, however with the front shifting south of Baltimore, most of the day could end up dry. Most of Sunday likely stays dry as well with just a low threat for an afternoon shower/T-storm. Temperatures will be slightly cooler this weekend, with highs in the middle to upper 80s. Northerly winds are also expected, especially on Saturday. A higher threat for showers/T-storms should develop on Monday as the next front arrives.
