Today – A drier and slightly more stable airmass has settled over the Dominican Republic for today. There will be a low threat for showers between 9am-1pm as the sea breeze advances inland, otherwise the main focus for daytime showers/T-storms should be to our west. Winds will become east/northeast at 6-12 mph with some gusts near 15 mph possible near the water. A high of 91 degrees is expected. Potential Rainfall: Less than 0.10". Sunrise: 6:24am / Sunset: 6:27pm

Extended Forecast – Easterly trade winds to remain in place through the weekend and into early next week. The sea breeze will favor a quick transition inland each day, with the focus for showers/T-storms setting up to our west. The one exception could be on Saturday with a weak upper level disturbance passing overhead. This could enhance coverage of showers/T-storms closer to the area. Winds will generally be out of the east to northeast at 6-12 mph with some gusts up to around 15 mph.
