Today – A few passing ocean showers are forecast to occur through the mid-morning hours, with the coverage of these showers forecast to diminish from late morning through the early afternoon. An increase in moisture this afternoon is expected to allow for an area of scattered showers to push off Puerto Rico and towards or just south of Punta Cana after 3-4pm. Should any of these cells track over the course they would be capable of producing heavy downpours and wind gusts of 30-35 mph, but the fast-moving nature of these showers should limit rainfall totals. Outside any showers expect east-northeasterly winds to be sustained between 16-22 mph with gusts of 25-30 mph.

Forecast rainfall: 0.10" – 0.25"

Tomorrow – Isolated passing ocean showers are anticipated through mid-morning on Monday, with a reduced coverage of these showers thereafter through the late afternoon. Scattered showers are forecast to stream across the Mona passage by early evening, bringing the potential for a few heavy downpours in this fast-moving activity. East-northeasterly winds will be sustained between 15-20 mph with gusts of 24-28 mph – strongest along the ocean.
