Today – Expect partly cloudy skies this morning with an isolated shower or two possible through 10am before this activity moves inland. Dry conditions are then anticipated for the afternoon hours, with just a slim chance of an ocean shower late in the day. The temperature will reach a high near 84 degrees. Breezy east-northeasterly winds will become sustained at 14-18 mph with occasional gusts in the 20-22 mph range this afternoon.

Forecast rainfall through 7pm: 0.05" or less.

Extended forecast – An increase in the coverage of morning showers is forecast to occur on Friday, with perhaps one or two of these cells being capable of brief moderate to heavy rainfall. Drier conditions are forecast for Friday afternoon, though activity developing over Puerto Rico may stream towards Punta Cana late in the afternoon or by the early evening. Expecting a drier and more stable atmosphere to return for Saturday. Sunday will start off dry, but guidance continues to suggest an increase in moisture during the afternoon – potentially allowing for a shower or two to stream in off the ocean later in the day.

Forecast prepared by meteorologist Joe Halvorson.
