Today – Drier air has begun to filter in across Puerto Rico and will likely limit the shower potential for the late morning and afternoon hours. Showers may develop over El Yunque National Forest throughout the day, but steering winds will keep them well south of the course. Winds will remain blustery from the east-northeast, sustained at 15-25 mph and commonly gusting between 25-30 mph. Temperatures top out in the low 80s.

Additional rainfall through 6pm Sunday: Less than 0.10"

Tonight/Tomorrow – Showers are anticipated to increase in coverage overnight into early Monday morning, likely producing several rounds of fast-moving heavy downpours. Expect scattered activity to continue into Monday morning, with drier conditions anticipated for much of Monday afternoon. East-northeasterly winds will remain breezy, commonly gusting between 20-25 mph. The temperature will top out in the low 80s.
