Today – A warm front will move across Lower Michigan this afternoon/evening with increasing moisture and instability levels. Dry conditions are initially expected through the morning hour with just a 10-20% chance for shower/T-storm development this afternoon. Slightly higher chances for showers/T-storms could develop this evening. Overall, confidence is low regarding any potential shower/T-storm development today. Sunrise: 6:00am / Sunset: 9:13pm

Extended Forecast – A warm front will push through Detroit this evening with the threat for showers/T-storms developing between 6-10pm. There is some uncertainty still, but coverage of any development should remain isolated to widely scattered. Regardless, heavy downpours would be possible with any T-storm. Very warm and humid conditions are expected on Sunday with another low threat for shower/T-storms development. Again, confidence in any development is low but the most likely focus for showers/T-storms would be along any lake breeze boundaries.
