Today – Expect mostly sunny skies with dry conditions through the morning. A few showers may develop in the Koʻolau Range after 2pm, with an isolated chance this activity drifts back towards the course. Otherwise expect temperatures to top out in the low 80s with northeasterly winds gradually turning southeasterly through the course of the day.

Extended forecast – Partly cloudy with a low risk for an isolated passing shower or drizzle on Saturday, mainly prior to 8am. Easterly winds are forecast to turn southeasterly and lighter after 3pm Saturday. Scattered showers are forecast for Sunday ahead of a front that will bring widespread rain overnight Sunday into Monday. A few of these late afternoon showers may produce brief heavy downpours as they move in off the ocean from the southwest. Rain will become likely overnight Sunday into Monday with a threat for locally heavy rainfall and a slight risk for thunderstorms.

Forecast prepared by meteorologist Joe Halvorson.
