Extended forecast – A weak frontal boundary will push across Oahu this evening and will dissipate south of the area on Thursday. The trade winds will return on Thursday with a few (mainly morning) showers remaining possible due to lingering moisture associated with the dissipating front. Winds become light on Friday with a few pop-up showers possible during the afternoon hours. There's a low risk for an isolated shower amid light winds on Saturday. Scattered showers are forecast for Sunday ahead of a front that will bring widespread rain overnight into Monday. Confidence in the timing of the front is medium.
