Today – A chilly start this morning with temperatures in the mid 40s. Otherwise, a light offshore will provide sunny skies and help temperatures warm into the mid 60s by midday before the sea breeze moves onshore. This will likely cool the temperatures down into the low 60s during the afternoon. An approaching trough may produce some marine layer low clouds along the coast this evening.

Extended Forecast – A trough of low pressure will move southward along the CA/NV border on Saturday increasing the northwesterly winds to 12-18 gusting to 25 mph by Saturday afternoon making for windy and cool conditions. The wind will likely peak Saturday night with gusts to 30 mph before gradually decreasing on Sunday. Otherwise, sunny skies can be expected with temperatures rebounding into the low 70s Sunday afternoon and mid-70s Monday.
