Today – Mostly cloudy to mixed skies are forecast throughout the day with temperatures topping out in the mid-80s. Isolated areas of drizzle and a few light showers may occur this morning to midday. A few pop-up showers and isolated thunderstorms will then become possible after 3pm – especially if there are some breaks in the cloud cover to allow for instability to build. West-northwesterly winds through the early afternoon will become south-southwesterly and increase in speed after 3pm. Forecast rainfall through 8pm: Less than 0.05", locally higher in any isolated afternoon thunderstorm.
Sunrise: 6:12am / Sunset: 7:47pm

Extended forecast – Cloudy overnight with an isolated thunderstorm possible. A few showers will be possible Saturday morning, along with an isolated risk for a thunderstorm. Expect showers to increase to a scattered coverage in the afternoon as embedded thunderstorm/lightning chances increase to 40%. Sunday's forecast remains a bit uncertain and is highly dependent on the track, intensity, and timing of Tropical Storm Henri. Henri is currently forecast to track to the north-northeast today and tomorrow and will approach southeastern New England on Sunday. The spread in the track/potential landfall for Henri on Sunday remains large, ranging from eastern Long Island to just east of Cape Cod. At this time, the forecast will call for likely chances of rain throughout the day. Rain will be heavy at times, with 0.75"-1.50" currently forecast. A few embedded thunderstorms in the morning will become scattered in coverage during the afternoon (Lightning probability 30% in AM, 50% in PM). Expect breezy to windy conditions, depending on Henri's track.
