

FRIDAY, JULY 10, 2021 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

We received over half an inch of rain last night with the severe showers and storms as winds gusted over 45 mph shortly after midnight. There is a batch of showers and storms to our north that we are watching to start this morning, but it seems as though most, if not all, of that activity will narrowly stay just to our north and east as it slides by. We'll have to be on our toes through 8:30 AM this morning, but hopefully we'll just find ourselves in a radar gap most of the rest of the morning with just a rogue 40% chance of a shower or storm possible. Once we work our way through this afternoon we will eventually find more activity on radar developing around Omaha with a 60% chance of showers and storms anytime after lunch with the highest threat mid to late afternoon. Temps will only top out in the 70s today with dewpoints in the 60s and variable winds this morning becoming a northerly breeze later on today. Tonight we still have a decent chance at seeing some more showers that should be mainly of the lighter variety and we'll keep a 40% risk of a shower, 20% risk of a storm periodically for Sunday as conditions slowly improve.
