Today – Cloud cover has increased across the region as a weak upper-level disturbance approaches NW Utah. As this disturbance lifts across the area between 10am-4pm, a very low chance (5-10%) for a shower/T-storm will exist. Otherwise, dry conditions can be expected during the day with a mix of clouds and sun. Temperatures should warm into the middle 90s this afternoon with winds becoming westerly at 6-12 mph. Sunrise: 6:25am / Sunset: 8:41pm

Extended forecast – An unsettled period of weather is expected across northern Utah through Saturday as multiple upper-level disturbances interact with monsoonal moisture. A low potential (20-30% chance) for showers/T-storms can be expected tonight into Friday. Shower/T-storm chances (40-60%) should increase Friday night into Saturday. Localized pockets of heavy rain could occur within this activity with the potential for rainfall amounts up to 0.50". Moisture levels should begin to decrease Saturday night with dry conditions favored across the area on Sunday.
