Today – A trough of low pressure is passing by to the north switching the winds out of the northwest and north today. The northerly flow will bring a reinforcing shot of drier air across Nassau this afternoon into tonight keeping the humidity levels comfortable for this time of year. Otherwise, partly cloudy skies can be expected today with a NW to N wind of 10-15 mph.

Extended forecast – High pressure will build to the north over the next several days providing a warming trend into the weekend. Temperatures will likely warm into the low 80s each day with a minimal chance for showers. Warmer and more humid conditions return Sunday as the winds shift out of the southeast. Scattered showers will become likely Sunday night into Monday as a trough develops over the Bahamas. The trough will lift northeast on Tuesday allowing drier conditions to return.
