Today – Partly cloudy skies will become mostly cloudy by late morning through early to mid-afternoon as upper-level energy moves through Michigan. Cannot rule out an isolated passing shower or two during this timeframe. However, the higher chances for receiving showers will be to our north. It will become breezy by early afternoon with gusts to 25-30 mph at times. Drier air returns by late afternoon with clearing skies expected into the evening.

Extended forecast – High pressure will build over the region on Friday and continue to dominate our weather through the weekend. Sunny skies can be expected to start the day Friday before some fair-weather clouds develop for the afternoon making for partly cloudy skies. Temperatures will be comfortable with highs in the low 80s. A gradual warming trend is expected as we go through the weekend with highs warming to near 85 Saturday with upper 80s likely returning on Sunday.
