Today – Light to perhaps briefly moderate showers are expected this morning but should become more intermittent by the late morning hours. Generally expecting a lull in activity during the early afternoon, with just an isolated risk for a pop-up shower or storm. Widely scattered showers are anticipated after 3pm – with the highest precipitation chances expected towards the end of the round. The thunderstorm risk is likely to remain isolated. A brief heavy shower may occur this afternoon. Southeasterly winds will increase to 7-13 mph early this afternoon. Forecast rainfall: Less than 0.15" Sunrise: 6:55am / Sunset: 6:44pm

Tomorrow – Model guidance continues to struggle to come into agreement regarding the timing of the greatest precipitation chances for Sunday and subsequent potential for afternoon thunderstorms. Currently, the forecast calls for showers to be possible Sunday morning – a few of which may be briefly heavy. Hourly lightning probabilities will be 10-20% Sunday morning. Expect a lull in activity to arrive in the late morning and continue through the early afternoon before a redevelopment of scattered showers and a few embedded thunderstorms occurs for the late afternoon and into the evening. The greatest precipitation/lightning chances will arrive after 4pm. Forecast rainfall: 0.20" – 0.40" Sunrise: 6:56am / Sunset: 6:43pm
