Today – A few showers and perhaps an isolated thunderstorm may develop this morning due to the continued influence of an upper-level disturbance – but expect large periods of dry time between any activity that does materialize. Showers and thunderstorms will gradually increase in coverage this afternoon, with a cluster of showers and thunderstorms expected to approach from the southwest during the late afternoon/early evening hours. The highest precipitation chances are expected from 4-8pm. Heavy downpours will be possible. The temperature will reach a high near 82°F. Winds will be south-southeasterly. Sunrise: 6:54am / Sunset: 6:46pm
Observed rainfall overnight: 0.03". Forecast rainfall through 7pm: 0.15" – 0.30", locally higher in storms.

Extended forecast – Patchy fog will be possible prior to 9am on Friday, otherwise expect partly cloudy skies with a few showers and thunderstorms becoming possible after 1pm. Largely expecting dry conditions on Saturday but cannot rule out a stray shower or pop-up thunderstorm in the afternoon. Confidence in Sunday's forecast is medium. Forecast guidance suggests a few morning showers will develop with scattered thunderstorms expected Sunday afternoon ahead of a frontal boundary approaching from the northwest.
