Extended forecast – A ridge of high pressure will promote dry conditions this week, though an isolated passing shower or two cannot be ruled out amid the easterly flow off the ocean. Temperatures will start off in the middle to upper 60s each day before warming into the low 80s. A few afternoon showers may become possible on Sunday ahead of a weak frontal boundary approaching from the north – but expect any rainfall from this activity will hold below 0.10" with no thunderstorms forecast to occur.
