Today – Sunny skies can be expected through the morning before clouds build over the mountains during the afternoon and spread towards the coast. This will likely produce showers along the mountain and interior sections by mid-afternoon. Cannot rule out an isolated shower or two making to the golf course by late in the day. Otherwise, warm temperatures can be expected with a westerly sea breeze increasing to 10-15 mph during the afternoon.

Extended forecast – A weakening cold front will dissipate over the islands by Saturday as it moves to the south. This may produce scattered showers, especially along the mountains and Hilo side of the island. Otherwise, partly to mostly sunny skies can be expected for Kona with highs in the upper 70s to low 80s. Light morning winds will increase by the afternoon as the sea breeze moves inland.
