

SATURDAY, JUNE 26th, 2022 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Winds becoming light and variable overnight has once again led to some fog development along low lying areas to start the day, burning off quickly after sunrise, this will leave behind a thick layer of dew similar to what we saw Saturday morning. As we warm up this morning look for things to feel muggy as dewpoints rising into the upper 60s while temperature will quickly jump into the 80s around the time the first groups are getting underway. As the sun starts to dry everything out dewpoints will settle back down into the mid 60s while temperatures are expected to once again find themselves in the 90s this afternoon under mostly sunny skies. Winds will ramp up this morning ahead of the approaching cold front currently producing showers and storms across the western PA border with averages around 10 mph gusting to as high as 18 mph at the time the final group is teeing off lasting through the end of play this evening while the frontal boundary isn't expected to make it over eastern PA until sometime after midnight with less of a tenth of inch in accumulation falling before sunrise Monday morning.
