Extended forecast – Temperatures cool into the low to mid-80s Friday and Saturday as a high pressure ridge weakens and moisture increases. Expect that a few thunderstorms will develop during after 1pm on Friday. The highest chances for showers and thunderstorms this week are expected to arrive Saturday afternoon, with scattered activity forecast after 12pm. Isolated showers and storms remain a possibility for Sunday afternoon as high pressure begins to re-strengthen. Anticipate that light northwesterly or variable winds each morning will turn easterly and increase in speed each afternoon, occasionally gusting between 20-25 mph. Although winds will primarily be from an easterly direction each afternoon, erratic outflow winds from any nearby showers/storms are likely to produce periods of gusty winds from various directions through Sunday. Forecast confidence in the direction of any potential outflow winds will remain low beyond 24 hours out.
