Today – A stable airmass is situated Chicago with comfortable temperatures and low humidity levels today. Some elevated wildfire smoke could create hazy skies during the afternoon, otherwise it will be mostly sunny much of the day. While relatively light winds can be expected, a lake breeze should cause winds to become easterly by mid-afternoon.

Extended forecast – High pressure will remain situated over the region on Saturday but will weaken by Sunday as a backdoor cold front reaches Chicago. Mild conditions will continue Saturday with southerly winds gusting upwards of 20 mph during the afternoon. Before the front arrives Sunday, temperatures should warm up quickly, to near 90 degrees. Winds likely shift to the northeast during the afternoon with cooling temperatures expected. At this point, any precipitation with this front remains unlikely.
