Today – Expect a mix of sun and clouds with breezy to windy conditions as drier air begins to wrap around an area of low pressure positioned west-northwest of Bermuda. This drier air mixing in will lead to an overall lower coverage of rain and showers relative to the last couple days; however, some fast-moving bands of rain are still expected to develop and will be capable of producing brief heavy rain squalls. South-southwesterly winds of 16-22 mph this afternoon are forecast to gust in the 25-30 mph range. Winds may gust in the 30-35 mph range overnight. Forecast rainfall through 7pm: Around 0.10"; locally higher in any heavy cells.

Observed rainfall overnight: 0.05"

Tomorrow – A few showers will remain possible Sunday morning as the area of low pressure that has brought unsettled weather this week passes nearby – just to the north of Bermuda. This low will then continue off to the northeast tomorrow afternoon, ushering in drier and stable air from the west. Westerly winds will be blustery, sustained at 15-20 mph with frequent gusts around 25 mph. The temperature will reach a high near 80 degrees. Forecast rainfall 7pm Saturday to 8am Sunday: 0.15" – 0.30"

Forecast rainfall 8am – 6 pm Sunday: Less than 0.05"
