6 AM Update

Friday, 14 July 2023

Synopsis -

Rain has moved in from the SW this morning and will linger up until the 7 AM hour. The rest of the morning will be under cloudy skies with some breaks in the clouds expected by late morning into the afternoon. The threat for a few isolated showers increase early afternoon then main area of steady to heavy rains begin to move in after 1600 hours. The rain will continue into the evening and into just after midnight before tapering off to a few showers. A period of stronger winds set up after play finishes and into the overnight with speeds coming from the E at 15-25 MPH. Total rainfall today from start to finish will remain in the 8-16 mm range. Tomorrow, low pressure system will be situated to the west of us providing us with a dry morning then scattered showers and thunderstorms begin to develop just after the noon hour. The convective showers will develop SW and move NE throughout the afternoon with embedded thunderstorms that will produce locally heavy rainfall and gusty winds. The threat diminishes by evening. Strong winds settle in for Sunday morning by 8 AM and continue through 5-6 PM at speeds of 20-30 MPH and gusting to 40+ MPH at times.
