4:30 AM Weather Update

Friday, April 7, 2023

Synopsis: A cold front currently situated across northern portions of Georgia and South Carolina is forecast to traverse the Augusta area around 3PM. A few showers may pop up out ahead of this feature this morning before activity becomes more numerous in the afternoon. Additionally, thunderstorms will be possible in the vicinity of the frontal boundary between 1-5PM. Breezy northeasterly winds behind the front will usher in much colder conditions for the late afternoon and evening hours. Areas of rain this evening will become widespread by early Saturday morning with temperatures falling into the upper 40s. Widespread rain continues throughout the day on Saturday and is likely to be heavy at times. Rain persists into Saturday night but will gradually diminish to light showers by daybreak Sunday. Dry conditions finally return Sunday afternoon, with overcast skies becoming partly sunny during the late afternoon hours.
