Tomorrow – A cold front is expected to move across the Carolinas Sunday afternoon/evening. Showers/T-storms over the Appalachians will try to push towards Charlotte late Sunday afternoon (after 4pm). While the activity likely weakens as it approaches, some shower activity may hold together. The threat for lightning is conditional, given very marginal instability values, but a low chance (5-10%) will be included in the forecast. Southwest winds will increase, with gusts of 15-20 mph possible during the afternoon. A high in the lower 80s is expected. Most Likely Rainfall: Less than 0.10". Sunrise: 7:13am / Sunset: 7:16pm
