Today – Lingering moisture will keep an isolated shower chance in the forecast this morning, but drier air will begin to overspread the islands from the north as we go through the afternoon. Otherwise, mainly partly cloudy skies can be expected with highs in the upper 70s. A light wind this morning will increase out of the NE 10-15 mph for the afternoon as well.

Extended forecast – High pressure will continue to build south and dominate the weather Friday into the weekend with much drier air. This will keep showers to a minimum with most locations remaining rain free into early next week. Otherwise, partly cloudy to mostly sunny skies can be expected each day with highs near 80 degrees. An ENE trade wind will average 10-15 mph with some higher gusts.
