Today – Dry air over the state will prevent showers from developing again today with mostly sunny skies. The high to the north will shift east allowing the wind to shift more out of south today. This will pull the vog from the Big Island over Oahu making for hazy conditions as we go through the day. Otherwise, temperatures will be warm with highs in the low 80s.

Extended forecast – High pressure will shift further east Saturday keeping dry air over Oahu for one more day. This will keep showers to a minimum with mostly sunny to partly cloudy skies. The vog will remain with hazy conditions continuing as well. The high will weaken and move further east allowing the trade winds to return Sunday. This will bring a small chance for showers Sunday afternoon into Sunday evening. The trades will weaken on Monday but can't rule out a few showers during the morning.
