Extended forecast – A cold front is forecast to reach Austin between 9am-11am on Friday. This front looks to be much weaker than originally forecast and rain/thunder chances continue to decrease from previous forecasts. A line of showers is now expected along the front with a few embedded thunderstorms possible. Total rainfall on Friday is around a tenth of an inch. Southerly winds are forecast Friday morning with winds shifting to the west behind the front and increasing to 10-20mph. Dry weather is forecast this weekend with warm afternoon temperatures and lighter winds.

Forecast prepared by meteorologist Wade Stettner.
