Extended forecast – A complex of showers and thunderstorms is expected to develop out ahead of a cold front on Friday. A few showers and thunderstorms may pop up out ahead of the complex after 8am Friday morning prior to widespread rain and thunderstorms reaching TPC Louisiana around 10am. A few thunderstorm wind gusts of 30-40 mph could occur as this complex arrives. The thunderstorm complex will take around 4 hours to move through before a lull likely settles in after 2pm and continues through 8pm. Additional scattered showers and a few thunderstorms will then become possible between 8pm and midnight as the cold front sweeps through. Dry conditions return after midnight and will continue through the weekend. Breezy north-northeasterly winds are forecast behind the cold front on Saturday – strongest in the morning and early afternoon with gusts near 22 mph. Dry and breezy Sunday with northeasterly winds turning easterly at noon.

Forecast prepared by meteorologist Joe Halvorson.
