Extended forecast – An uptick in shower coverage is possible tonight, especially after midnight. Rainfall amounts will be light, and lightning will not occur. Some lingering showers are possible Saturday morning, otherwise dry conditions are favored the rest of the day as a stable airmass resides over northern Georgia. Instability will increase going into Sunday, however a triggering mechanism for shower/T-storm development will be missing. Given this, shower/T-storm probabilities will be kept at 15% Sunday afternoon.
