Today – Ample cloud cover and scattered on/off showers expected throughout today as the aforementioned low begins to trek near/just south of the area this afternoon. The potential for shower activity is forecast to increase this afternoon with the approach of the center of the system, mainly between 3-8PM. A low threat for a weak storm or two remains possible during that timeframe although the widespread cloud cover will aid in limiting the threat this PM.

Sunday – The system will continue drifting eastward overnight into Sunday morning, pulling nearly all precipitation with it. A few light sprinkles may persist in the area through 8AM, but conditions will steadily clear through the late morning hours. Showers and storms should develop within the Idaho mountains well to the east of Boise through the mid-afternoon, but generally clearing skies and slightly warmer conditions are expected in our area tomorrow afternoon.

Sunrise: 701am / Sunset: 831pm
